CAN I Learn to Fly?

By WILLIAM R. NELSON

First Solo Flight

TO EVERY student sooner or later comes that memorable day when he or she flies "solo" for the first time. Some students have been "turned loose" after one day of instruction. Others require fifteen or twenty hours of instruction first. The average normal person solos after eight to ten hours of dual flying.

Good flying schools carefully build up a student's confidence, as well as his ability, before sending him off alone. Seldom is the embryo flyer told in advance he is to solo. It comes, fairly unexpectedly, only when the student has demonstrated he is ready for it.

"Now I want you to do it a couple more times for me," my instructor had said simply.

He had climbed out of his seat ahead of me and was standing on the wing walk, leaning into my cockpit. I recalled later that he had studied my expression minutely. After he spoke he smiled and stepped down to the ground and waved me to go ahead.

I opened the throttle, pushed the stick forward and was off. I was too busy to think of anything but operating the plane until after I had made my second turn and was cruising back to glide in for the landing. Then I noticed that empty seat ahead of me and my heart began to pound.

"You have done all of this many times before," I said to myself. "Just imagine he is sitting there as usual. He thinks you can do it. He said 'do it for me.' You can't fall him," ran through my mind and calmed me.

The glide in was uneventful and the landing, my first solo landing, was "three-point." That gave me some satisfaction. But it was short-lived. As the plane rolled along after landing, I unconsciously pushed forward slightly on the right rudder pedal and before I discovered the error, the plane turned around in a slow "ground loop." My instructor came running up, laughed at my consternation over the loop, and sent me away again on solo number two.

The second trip was more jerky than the first. I was getting nervous. The landing was not as good, either. I worked the stick backward too fast and hit the ground harder than I should, causing a bounce. That did no damage but it shook my confidence and my instructor called it a day.

The garden still is green
And green the trees around,
But the winds are roaring over-head
And branches strew the ground.
And today on the garden pool
Floated an autumn leaf;
How rush the seasons, rush the years,
And, oh, how life is brief.
—Richard Watson Gilder.

THIS AND THAT

For a Sunday night supper just try this loaf; it can be made some hours before the time for serving:

Sunday Loaf.—Remove the crust from a loaf of bread and slice lengthwise in three pieces. Place one slice on a platter and spread with mayonnaise dressing to moisten, then cover with chopped, raw cabbage mixed with chopped pineapple. Use a loaf of sandwich bread, one and one-half cups of chopped cabbage, one-half cup of pineapple, one-half cup of cream cheese, after covering with mayonnaise and cover with cream cheese. Spread this on the third slice and put them together, cover all over, the frosting a nice, with the cream cheese. Place in the ice chest to chill. Garnish with stuffed olives, radish slices and watercress. Serve in thick slices. A sliced tomato may be used in one of the layers as filling.

Spanish Beans. Soak one cupful of dried beans in water overnight. In the morning cook until tender. Add six tablespoons of shortening, in a frying pan, add beef sliced onions and cook until light brown. Add one can of tomatoes, three-fourths of a teaspoonful of salt, a dash of pepper and a teaspoonful of sugar. Cook slowly for an hour, then add the beans and serve with hot green pepper sauce.

Quick Hot Stew. Add to chopped cabbage that has been cooked in a very little water, butter, salt and a teaspoonful of sugar; serve with a very little vinegar, oil piping hot.

TWO-MINUTE SERMON

by REV. GEORGE HENRY MYSELF

I believe in myself, not because of what I have done, for I have done nothing worthy of mention; and not for what I have made of myself, because I have only been in God's way while He was trying to make a man of me; but because of what I may do and what I may become by the help of God if I really want to do or become anything worth while. I believe in my possibilities. I believe that if I want to be useful, God will make me useful; and if I want to be holy, God will make me holy. I believe that we are in the childhood of life; that this world is a training school in which I am given an opportunity to prepare for the larger life to come, and that the aim of this school is not pleasure, but development without waste.

LITTLE BOY DIES OF ACCIDENTAL POISONING

The people of Bryant Pond were saddened last Thursday morning to learn of the sudden death of Gerald, the youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Littlehale. He was about two years old. He climbed to a shelf in the bathroom and drank a few drops of oil of wintergreen. He died the next morning in spite of attempts made by a doctor to save him. He is survived by his parents, one brother Lawrence, his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Ordway, two aunts, Mrs. Sylvia Judkins of Bryant Pond, and Mrs. Evelyn Taylor of Frye, two uncles, Sherman and Eugene Ordway of Bryant Pond.

Oxford County United Parish

Embracing Albany, Center Lovell, No. Lovell, Stonelham and Waterford.

Pastoral Staff: Revs. W. I. Bull, R. A. Brandon, A. C. Townsend.

Last Sunday was observed in all the churches as Christmas Sunday, with good congregations, and in some of them with special Christmas music.

Christmas trees and programs are in order this week.

North Waterford celebrates with a supper and Christmas tree on Tuesday evening. Albany does the same on Friday evening. On Wednesday evening, all the other communities celebrate. Waterford Flat joins with 80.

On New Year's Eve, Dec. 31, there will be a special musical entertainment in the Wilkins Community House at Waterford. Mr. Neilly, director of the Waterford Church Choir of Portland, with a group of singers of that choir will be present. After a musical program, a supper will be served by the Circle, under the direction of Miss Mabel Gage, to be followed by a social hour, closing with the singing of Tenyson's "Ring out, wild bells," as the old year passes into the new.

The next Council meeting, which would fall on New Year's Day, will be postponed one week, and will be held at East Stoneham, Thursday, Jan. 8, for noon and afternoon, with a dinner served by the Stoneham Circle.

The Crooked River Outing Club is making plans for the annual Winter Carnival, which will probably be held some time in February.

Rowe Hill, Greenwood

The pupils, having a perfect record for the fall term of school are David Libby, William Libby, Edward Libby, and Robert York.

Miss Vern Dugham visited Mrs. Linwood Ring Friday and attended the grade school Christmas tree with Mrs. Ring in the afternoon. Both Miss Dugham and Miss Alice Andrews of Bryant Pond were week end guests. Miss Dugham is visiting relatives at Locke Mills at present.

Mr. and Mrs. George Powers have gone from Orlan York's to Lewiston where Mrs. Powers has work, cooking, for a short time.

Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Perham were callers at Orlan York's Monday evening.

Mrs. Mabel Dunham spent the day with her daughters, Elsie and Nettie Cole, at Greenwood Center last Thursday.

Newton Bryant and family went to Summer last Sunday. The roads were good, only slippery in places.

The young people have been busy the past few days scraping a skating rink on Indiana Pond. They plan a skating party soon, but the weather indications at present make it look rather doubtful.

Lewis Libby is in rather poor health. Colby Ring believes in exercise. Possibly he is reducing. He walks from his home to Ring's meat market, Bryant Pond, each day, and home at night.

Mr. and Mrs. Lamont Brooks visited Mrs. Brooks' sister, Mrs. Bert Allen, Woodstock, Sunday.

Newton and Wilmer Bryant were at Quimby Perham's, butchering, Monday.

The Crusaders met with Carl Brooks last Friday evening.

EAST BETHEL

Mrs. Carrie Bartlett has been spending a week with her daughter, Mrs. Clifton Bean, at Rumford. Mr. and Mrs. Willis Bartlett have been keeping house for her.

Mrs. Ole Oleson has been sick, but is gaining now.

Gedrie Russell of Rumford is spending his vacation with O. B. Farwell and family. Gena and Bertha Oleson of Newry are visiting Jorgen Oleson and family. R. D. Hastings is hauling potatoes to Portland.

Mr. and Mrs. G. N. Sanborn visited C. M. Kimball and family Sunday. Miss Eva Bean, R. N., has been visiting hervuncle, A. M. Bean, also Bryant Bean of Locke Mills.

Mr. and Mrs. Carl Swan of Locke Mills were Sunday callers at J. H. Swan's.

Monday evening the Grangers and community enjoyed a Christmas tree and entertainment at the Grange Hall.

Tales—Wise and Otherwise

A LITTLE BOY'S THOUGHTS

Addie Kendall Mason

I think the Merry Christmas days (That come with glistening snow And winds made cold by Jack Frost bold To make our cheeks aglow).

Are just the dearest days I know For then we children small Catch glimpses of gay bundles— (But mother hides them all).

In vain we search, and listen At every fast closed door; (And Dad and Ma did just the same In Christmas days of yore).

And then the night 'fore 'Christmas— Who wants to go to bed? With glistening diamonds in the field And twinkling stars o'er head.

With "moon glow" on the hill tops To brighten every road— Why! we want to watch for "Santa" And we'd like to help unload.

And feed those dandy Reindeer That have come so far and fast; But we fall asleep while watching And it's Christmas morn at last.

And we never saw "Old Santa" As the chimney down he came; But we know by many a token That he got here just the same.

For here's the doll for Nellie And the sled for brother Lew— And here's the skates I wanted And a look for Grandma too.

And Baby has a silver spoon A rattle with some bells— And I had has a the-mom-e-ter— How cold it is, that tells.

And nan has got a brand new dress Like her eyes all shiny blue; And Grandpa got new mittens too— They'll keep his hands warm too.

Oh! Christmas time is lovely And "Old Santa" can't be beat But Oh! don't I wish I'd seen him Driving all those Reindeer fleet.

I am glad he still comes with Reindeer From far o'er the hills away; For I'm sure if he tried to be modern He'd get stalled in some motor sleigh.

And Christmas day would be dreadful While we youngsters howled with a vim; And a moody and wrathful Santa Was waiting to be hauled in!

The Oxford County Citizen

OUT THERE

By FANNIE HURST

JAMES G. MORRELL was a graduate of two American universities and a French one. He had a Bachelor of Arts degree, a Master of Arts degree, and a Doctor of Laws degree. He spoke four languages fluently, and knew the piano, violin, and organ, all three of which he played with brilliancy, to say nothing of such lesser instruments as the guitar and banjo.

When he was twenty-five, his patriotism consisted solely of his magnificent education and what natural talents were so generously his.

The senior Morrell, his father and sole surviving relative, had died a week after he had lost his enormous holdings in a Wall Street crash.

The incredible sequel to that procedure lay in the fact that young Morrell, instead of feeling the crush of sudden poverty, realized within himself a sense of elation and release, that at first was incomprehensible to him.

What had happened was that a vagabond, who had all his life been imprisoned by circumstance, felt himself suddenly freed.

For the first time in his carefully designed life, the young Morrell dared to think for himself that he despised the profession of law that had been mapped out for him as the son of his wealthy father; that he despised the social routine in which he had been born and bred; that he was a free lance at heart and that at last he was at liberty to be himself.

That is how, during the next five years in the Bohemian quarters in practically every large city and seaport the figure of James Morrell was to become a familiar one. The tall slender young fellow, cultured, nonchalant, but a vagabond in dress and manner of living, became a wanderer in the various Bohemias of the world. A small ukulele, his only bit of luggage, he tinkled for a living.

James Morrell wandered from capital city to capital city, from seaport to seaport, from Shanghai to Seattle; from Seattle to Boston; from Boston to Trieste; from Trieste to Constantinople; from Constantinople to Rome; from Rome to Paris; from Paris to Marseilles; and so on and on, tinkling away on his ukulele for which, in return, he received his simple board and lodging.

For the first time in his carefully cultivated, extremely sophisticated young lifetime, James Morrell was happy. A vagabond, a minstrel, New scenes, new peoples, new pastimes. No struggle for existence because existence could be so simple. The world was what you made it. Young Morrell had made his playground, a carefree garden in which to sun himself. Big business, big destiny, big responsibility passed him by. There was never anything but loose change in his pockets, a loose fiddle in his fingers and a nonchalance in his heart.

James Morrell, Jr., who had been reared as the only child of a millionaire, turned gratefully to Bohemia. It was in the Bohemia that in New York, some five and a half years after the death of his father, that young Morrell walked into a situation that was to alter his footsteps from their wildly wandering.

Tinkling away his evenings in a Greek village cafe, where he received in return a bed in an attic and his three meals a day, young Morrell met and fell in love with a girl named Rachel Taylor, a blonde, barely beautiful and so not content in the quarter.

She was the daughter of a steel merchant in Pittsburgh and her father intended that she should marry a millionaire. A handsome, well-to-do young man, the son of a Pittsburgh family, the son of a Pittsburgh family, the son of a Pittsburgh family.

At the end of the second year, with three romance tales in ruins about them, James no longer able to withstand the temptations of a wife who was with child, he signed a promise of betrothal to a Pittsburgh law firm, which had been one of the few that had not been ruined by the crash.

That is the beginning. If a man was predicted for commercial success that man was James Morrell. As his father-in-law, who had in the beginning or so he thought, put it, everything that Morrell touched turned to gold and the money left of it was that it did not seem to be due to any genius that the fellow brought to his work.

There was something of a chained wild beast about Morrell. He endured his success in much the same way he endured his environment, his wife, and even his child. He saw it piling up about him and he let it pile. He stood in the courtroom declaiming in behalf of the great corporations he represented, and it sometimes seemed to him that some one on the outside of him was doing the speaking, while he, the shell of an individual, stood there cowering not at all.

It could almost be said of James Morrell that he did not turn a hand, considering the magnitude of his so-called achievements. He had an eye for the law, and a tongue that could, on the proper occasion, grow eloquent, but so had other men of less success.

When she was thirty, Rachel Taylor, who loved the life of creature comforts, creature comforts, and creature comforts, saw herself slowly climbing toward the very pinnacle of such attainments.

James Morrell was easily the foremost lawyer of the state to say nothing of the prospects of political power and position which lay ahead.

They used to say laughingly of Rachel Taylor Morrell that she had more than once referred to her husband as the future President of the United States.

Be that as it may, there was no doubt that the beautiful reddish eyes of Rachel were directed toward the seat of the mighty which she expected Morrell one day to occupy. One aspect of realization came to her in a vicarious way while James was still in his highly successful role of corporation lawyer. The lovely daughter of the James Morrells, Anne, aged eighteen, eloped one day in a hydroplane with the only child of one of the great oil magnates of the world.

In Rachel's opinion, that was the greatest plume in the cap of the Morrells that had yet been planted there.

Ten years later, the two grandchildren of the James Morrells had been presented with a trust fund of five million each by their paternal grandparents, and James Morrell had fastened on his wife a lifetime income that amounted to over one million a year.

Two months subsequent to this legal act, the cities of Pittsburgh and New York awakened one day to headlines announcing the mysterious disappearance of James Morrell. Secret searches had been going on for over a period of weeks before the general alarm was finally given out to a disquieted world.

After months of publicity, searches and expeditions of secret service men to various parts of the world, the publicity was suddenly hushed up.

Mrs. Morrell resumed her laughly impressive life as social leader, newspaper, for one reason or another, left of their playing up of this meaty story of disappearance of James Morrell.

It was whispered about among those "in the know" that it had cost Mrs. James Morrell a king's ransom to this stamp out the conspicuous happening of her husband's disappearance.

The truth of it, of course, was that James Morrell had finally been forgotten out, playing his ukulele in a fantastic harbor cafe at Marseilles.

After one conference with her husband, Rachel Taylor Morrell, who had a good head on her, realized the futility of attempting to bait or lure or threaten her husband back into his proper setting. As she talked to him in his slit of a room in Marseilles, she realized that here was a man twenty-five years younger than the one who had left her a few months before; here was a man who had grasped back his happiness after it had all slipped from him; here was a beloved vagabond in his proper setting.

James Morrell is pretty well forgotten now, even by Rachel who divorced him and is married again.

He may be found tinkling his way through the different Bohemias of the world. His ukulele is always with him and his worldly possessions are the few pennies that jangle in his pockets.

Just a Customs Incident

She was waiting the passengers of an ocean liner as they opened their bags for inspection.

"What have you to declare?" the customs officer asked of the timid little woman.

"I have only a silver tray I bought," she replied as she held it out to him.

"You see, I had to bring something to my daughter, and I don't have much money," she explained, looking at the officer with a pleading expression.

"I don't buy anything else," he said, looking at the tray.

She presented the tray to the man with a little quiver of pride. "Pretty, isn't it?"

The man looked at it and looked at the woman. "That's all right, it is a very pretty tray," he said, looking at the woman.

"Yes, I can see it cost quite a bit. There's no duty; you see, you are allowed to bring in a hundred dollars worth," the New York Sun.

Forest Waste Alarming

Both the supply of timber and the export of it are falling far short of the needs of the nation, writes E. J. McMeekin in the Journal of Forestry.

Devastation of productive forest land through fires and destruction of logging, promoted by waste in the woods, is a national disaster, and in the progress of an alarming rate.

The main difficulty in dealing with the decline of American forests lies in the chaotic condition of the lumber industry which controls four fifths of the forest lands of the country. This condition is due partly to excessive state taxation but mainly to internal disorders of an economic nature arising from lack of specialization and ill-placed subsidies in the past.

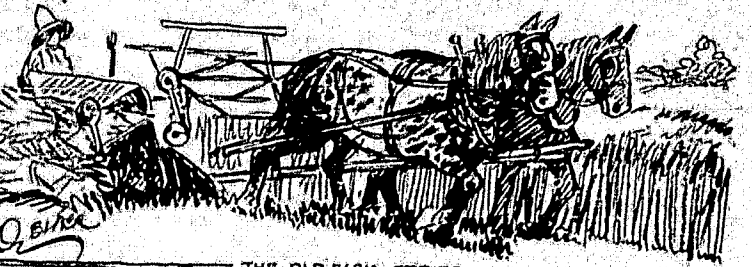

Radio in Argentina

Radio reception is so good in Argentina that the country has become the largest importer of American made radio apparatus. The government anticipates the twenty broadcasting stations, whose programs reach virtually every part of the country. Most of the 150,000 radio receivers in use are in Buenos Aires and about half of them are crystal sets, but one, two, five and eight tube straight regenerative and three circuit regenerative sets are becoming popular. Germany supplies most of the head sets because of their low price.

The Dapple-Gray

When the dapple-gray was a 4-year-old, And he led the herd with a flying mane, Then the idle days of the colt were done, And the hour had come for the trace and rein. So we snubbed him up at the snubbing post, And he fought, red-eyed, for an hour or more, 'Til his will was broke by the hempen rope. And he let us fit the old hackamore. Then his value rose in the marks of men, As he learned the law of the trace and rein. As he drew the plow through the ranks of corn, Or the dusty reaper that cut the grain. When the world has learned with the dapple-gray, That the power to serve is the meate of worth. Then the golden age of our dreams will dawn, And a truer freedom will bless the earth.

Frescoes and Furniture Found in Old Pompeii

Excavations at Pompeii have brought to light several important objects. A three-legged marble table, the top of which is missing, is one particularly interesting piece. Students have advanced the theory that this table was at one time the property of Caesar, one of the murderers of Julius Caesar. The three legs are each in the form of a lion's leg, surmounted by a lion's head and on the top of each head is a square block, on which the actual table top rested. In fact, on the surface of each of the three resting blocks is carved the word "Caesar." This enterprising Caesar used to have a house in Pompeii, although students present at the time of the discovery are not certain that his was the house. Yet it is not improbable, noted archaeologists say, that the table was purchased by some other patrician living at Pompeii and brought there from Rome. Delightful frescoes adorning the interior of the house have kept their colors so vividly that today visitors may admire, for instance, on one side of a doorway Narcissus seated and at the other side a representation of Pyramus and Thisbe.

Characters That Live in World's Literature

Frequently in the world's literature a character wholly imaginary becomes so well known as to give his name to the language. Such a character is Rodomont (the Italian significance of the name being "one who rolls away mountains"), from which, according to Webster's New International dictionary, we get our useful word rodomontade, which means "vain boasting, empty bluster or vaunting, rant." Rodomont is a Moorish hero and warrior—brave, beautiful, and fierce. He figures prominently as the king of Algiers in the works of two Italian poets of the fifteenth century, namely, in the "Orlando Innamorato" (Emmoredon) of Boiardo and in the "Orlando Furioso" (Mad) of Ariosto. A parallel example from English literature is Braggartio, the personification of vain boasting in Edmund Spenser's famous masterpiece, "The Faerie Queene," from which comes the expressive word braggartio, which means "empty boasting, mere brag, pretension."

Westinghouse Memorial

The memorial to George Westinghouse, inventor, is in Schenley park, Pittsburgh. The main part of the memorial, a bronze statue, was created by Daniel Chester French. It rises 20 feet from a Norwegian granite base and depicts a figure of the subject. At his sides are two figures, representing a skilled workman and an engineer. Facing this group is the figure of an American youth studying the achievements. The setting for the memorial was designed by Henry Hornbush of Pittsburgh. The Pierhill brothers of New York constructed the models of the statue for casting. The six panels, portraying the achievements of Mr. Westinghouse, were designed by Paul Fiebel. Subscriptions of employers of the Westinghouse industries in the United States and Canada made the memorial possible.

Radio in Argentina

Radio reception is so good in Argentina that the country has become the largest importer of American made radio apparatus. The government anticipates the twenty broadcasting stations, whose programs reach virtually every part of the country. Most of the 150,000 radio receivers in use are in Buenos Aires and about half of them are crystal sets, but one, two, five and eight tube straight regenerative and three circuit regenerative sets are becoming popular. Timothy's Goose Was Cooked

By H. LOUIS RAYBOLD

(Copyright.)

ABOUT all there was to Tim's act was Caroline, Caroline, the marvelous trained goose—that is how she was billed. Even Daisy's song was incidental, merely serving to fill forty-nine seconds while Tim changed Caroline's costume in the wings. Yes, Caroline was the little money maker in the Gordon and Gordon combination, and if Daisy hadn't had influenza and been laid up in a hospital for several weeks the season's profits wouldn't have been so bad.

Fortunately, they were booked some weeks ahead and if they made good further bookings would doubtless even up. At least, that was the situation when Tim fell a victim to the same prostrating malady which had so weakened his sister.

"It's no use, kid. I can't go on today. Heaven knows whether you can manage alone. Just our luck, too, having that guy Winters follow us with his dog net. Can't figure whether he's sweet on you or has an eye on getting the goose or queering our act somehow." Tim tossed restlessly.

"Tim manage?" Daisy assured him. But at the very mention of Dick's name, Daisy flushed until she rivalled Tim's feverishness. Was it coincidence that Winters had played in so many theaters at the same time as she and Tim? Was he really "sweet on her," or was Tim's other cynical snarl smile correct?

She resolutely put the thought from her and rose briskly. The work of the performance would be doubled for her, and before that there was the cold-blooded manager to propitiate who would not be keen about cancelling one member of the Trained Goose act.

At the stage door, Daisy ran into Dick and wondered if it was her imagination, or if, in the absence of Tim, he wasn't considerably more cordial and cheerfully than usual.

"Darn shame about Tim," he said. "Let me know if there's anything I can do. How's Caroline? Any time Tim wants to sell the old girl, don't forget she'd just top my net."

Somewhat or other, Daisy staggered through the afternoon and then rushed home to report to Tim, only to find her brother tossing in delirium.

A hastily summoned doctor looked grave, feared pneumonia, urged a nurse for the next few days. After he had gone, Daisy sat quietly for a few moments, then silently gathered her resources together, determined to put Tim through.

Recalling Dick's words, she called him by telephone in the lobby below and she felt a great wave of relief sweep through her as Dick promised to come right over.

Three days later Tim woke from his first refreshing sleep. Daisy sat beside him holding his thin, white hand.

Beneath Daisy's eyes were dark circles and her face was wan. There had been no work for Caroline the past few days. On the contrary, there had been bills for medicine, for the doctor, for the nurse, for extra time service. Daisy's pocketbook was flat and Tim's eldred pockets no longer jingled. Not near-broke now were Gordon and Gordon. Story broke.

And the doctor had said Tim must have nourishing food to pull him through.

Daisy bit her lip and her eyes filled. At that instant the door opened and Dick's head poked in. "How's Tim?" he whispered cheerily. "Better? Tim's good. Say, lend me Caroline, will you? She's no use to you right now."

Listlessly Daisy nodded assent and Dick withdrew. Tim, waking shrewdly, took all of Daisy's attention for some time. Suddenly, "Gee, but I'm starved," he said. "What do I get for supper?"

Daisy turned away. What did he get, poor fellow? She could pawn her suit perhaps and depend on her old raincoat. It might tide them over until they were earning once more. As she turned to take it down some one knocked at the door.

It was not Dick, as she had hoped, but the bellboy with a tray—a heavily laden tray. Such a supper! Broth for Tim, roast fowl with all its accompaniments for Daisy.

"De compliments of Mister Winters," said the boy and vanished. Just as they were finishing the meal Daisy remembered Caroline.

"I wonder what he wanted her for?" she said half aloud.

"Her? Who?" asked Tim.

"Dick borrowed Caroline," said Daisy.

"Dick Winters?" exclaimed Tim, who did not yet know of all that Dick had done. "Well, then, our goose is cooked!"

At his words Daisy's hand flew to her throat and her eyes to the empty tray. "Goose is cooked! Oh, no, Dick wouldn't have—that sort of thing might make a good plot for a story."

"Well, well, folks!" Dick's breezy voice burst upon them. "Some little benefit that was, thanks to Caroline! Stop your noise, Caroline! And here's the proceeds." Into Daisy's lap he poured handful after handful of coins and bills.

"After he had told them all about it Tim apologized sheepishly. "Misjudged you, old man," he said. "Thought you were after Caroline."

"No," said Dick slowly. "I'm not after Caroline." And across Tim's bed Dick's honest eyes and Daisy's shining ones met.

None of these pole sitters had had the gumption to try either the North or the South pole.

"It is impossible to obtain a really cool drink in England during the hot weather," declares an American. Perhaps he has never thought of ordering a nice hot cupful of coffee in a restaurant.

The Censor's Hint

Representative La Guardia said a dinner in New York:

"Censor's aren't the fools that censored make them out to be. I present English censor called on Alfred Butt one day in his life and said:

"Butt, my boy, I've gone over a new revue of yours, and I've passed every scene, though some of the stuff is pretty frisky. Now remember, nothing more is to be put on without my approval."

"Then the censor nodded toward a group of pretty dancing girls dressed in strings of beads and said: 'And nothing more is to be taken off, either.'—Detroit Free Press.

Barber's Mistake

When Bobby, who lives in the southeast part of town, returned from his first visit to the barber shop, his mother asked, "How did you like Bobby?"

"Aw, he tried to make a sissy of me," he answered disgustedly. "Why, Bobby? What do you mean?"

"Why, when he got through squirting perfume on my hair, he powdered my face with a brush."—Albany News.

"Coming in Fine"

The doctor's little daughter had strayed into his surgery and was watching, wide-eyed, as he tested a heart and lungs of a patient. Suddenly she spoke:

"Getting any new stations, daddy?"

CHURCH ACTIVITIES

FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH

L. A. Edwards, Pastor
10:45 "Our journey together through God's world in 1931."
We shall find what we look for in 1931. We shall remember the people we meet; the things that we do; the friendships we make. We do not need to become Pantheists to find God in the world in which we live. But let us look for Him in the wonders of nature; in the heart of His saints; in the Sacred Book; but more especially in Divine presence who comes to guide us through all the days of this coming year.
6:30 Comrades of the Way. The subject will be "Friendships."

BETHEL M. E. CHURCH

Rev. R. C. Dalzell, Minister
Sunday School at 9:45. Superintendent, Mrs. Bertha Wheeler.

Magalloway and Vicinity

Mrs. Robert Morcy and daughter have returned home from Berlin.
Miss Elizabeth Haldane is spending her Christmas vacation at her home in Portland.
Miss Ethel Knowlton is spending her Christmas vacation with her sister in Cambridge, Mass.

Gerald Littlehale and Kermit Sweetney are cutting pulpwood for Ernest Bennett.

Mr. and Mrs. Peter Littlehale and Lester Littlehale were called away last week by the sudden death of Werner Littlehale's little boy, Gerald.
Church services were held in the School House Sunday afternoon by Rev. Robert Haldane. The service was in commemoration of Christmas.
Robert Olson is getting out hard wood.

Winter seems to be staying away longer than common this year. The storm last week made an average of eight inches.
Lewis Olson is slowly gaining.
Kenneth Ripley has returned home and is feeling much better.

SOUTH WOODSTOCK

A Happy Merry Christmas to all. Everyone is rejoicing to see the "brown old earth" covered with its beautiful blanket of pure white snow, enthusiastically showing that there is Peace on earth, Good Will toward men.
The many friends of Miss Ruth Cole, who is still at the C. M. G. Hospital, Lewiston, are glad to hear that she is much improved and will soon be home.
Miss Flossie Parham, R. N., was on duty Saturday and Sunday at the office of Dr. Edwin Kay, West Paris. A patient from Lewiston submitted to a throat operation.
Mrs. Anna Niskonen Robbins is cooking for the logging crew at Asa Sessions' lumber camps on the old Columbus Parham place.
Fred Cash, who has been acting as cook at the same place, has returned home to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Anson Cash, ill health necessitating a rest from his work there.
Stanley Andrews is confined to the house, suffering from a bad attack of tonsillitis.
"Pete" Andrews was recently seen out exercising a pretty span of driving horses. A sight worth mentioning since everything is motorized, even a work horse being rarely seen.
Simeon Sanborn of Portland is acting as caretaker on the old Luther Whitman place (now owned by E. J. Mann of West Paris) at which place logging operations are being carried on by the Benson Brothers. They have several hundred cords of wood cut and yarded all ready for trucking.
Leland Austin of Bryant Pond was an early Tuesday morning caller at Gerald Davis'.
Guyson and Gerald Davis are hauling firewood, it taking about 50 cords a year for home consumption.
Everyone is delighted to hear of the reported birth of a baby boy at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Leslie Bryant of Bryant Pond. Mrs. Bryant was formerly Bath Farrington of this place.
James P. Farrington was called to Pigeon Hill recently, where he attended the funeral of his sister, Mrs. Ida Farrington Herat.
Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Thoms announce the engagement and approaching marriage of their daughter, Isa May Thoms, to Joseph Ring of West Paris. The teachers of Union School, Mary Hendrickson and Myrtle Thurlow, prepared a nice program for the Christmas exercises given by the children on Friday afternoon. Every child seemed enthused to do his best to entertain the large number of guests in attendance. A beautiful tree heavily laden with presents for all, and the timely arrival of Santa Claus with his heavy pack, gave the children a day long to be remembered as one of the happiest of their school days.
